High School Residency: Studio 1

4:00 p.m. on Saturday, June 24 to noon on Saturday, July 1, 2017.

Price: $1,200, which includes meals, housing and all materials.

This week-long high school residency program is focused on architecture, environment and design in the context of Frank Lloyd Wright's masterpiece, Fallingwater, one of America's most significant works of architecture.

Led by a registered architect and educator, this program provides an opportunity for students to examine and explore a host of Frank Lloyd Wright's ideas, while living and studying in the midst of this historic building. Situated in the scenic Laurel Highlands of Western Pennsylvania, the house serves as a catalyst to investigate the art and science of building, the history of the region, and environmental stewardship and sustainable design practices.

Students will engage in a series of hands-on exercises focusing on space, light, structure, and materials with special emphasis on creative problem solving, and Wright's ideas about nature and organic architecture.

Program activities include individual and collaborative projects, drawing and model-making exercises, and daily working sessions in and around Frank Lloyd Wright's timeless architectural masterpiece.

Peter Goldstein, AIA is an educator and licensed architect from Dallas, Texas. He has architecture degrees from Tulane University and Yale, and teaches in the Dallas Independent School District's architecture magnet program at Skyline High School.
